3. There were various positions which were paid even more than a given grade. This extra money was paid as a personal supplement which could be discontinued at any time. However, an executive's entire salary, including the personal supplement, could not exceed the highest pay of the grade next highest to his. For instance, if a referent in the IX grade received the highest grade salary of 1,920 forints, his total salary, including a personal supplement, could not exceed 2,450 forints, which is the highest salary of the VIII grade.
4. Administrative or clerical personnel, whose salaries ranged from 850-1,000 forints per month, included:
 - a. Accountants
 - b. The pay-roll office staff
 - c. Administrative Office employees
 - d. Typists and stenographers
5. Auxiliary personnel whose salaries ranged from 850-1,300 forints per month, included:
 - a. Archivists
 - b. Telephone operators
 - c. Skilled workers (carpenters, locksmiths, electricians, upholsterers, masons)
 - d. Chauffeurs
 - e. Other office clerks
6. Office assistants included porters, elevator operators, cleaning personnel. Their salaries ranged from 500-750 forints per month.
7. Employees were paid on the first and fifteenth of the month for the previous two-week period. With his pay, each employee received a pay slip, containing his name, serial number, amount of pay, amount of personal supplement, gross pay, deduction for the pension fund, deduction for fuel, deduction for the peace loan, deduction for advance pay, and deduction for payment on debt, if the employee had borrowed money from the State Credit Institute (Orszagos Keozponti Hitel Intezet -- OKH). The salary paid for the first half of a month went almost entirely for deductions. Pay was received in cash in a stiff envelope, which the employee signed and returned. For economy reasons, the same envelope was used from twelve to twenty-four months.
